

Not Killing And Liberating The Living

by Great Master Lyan Chr

The Retribution of Being Covered with Frogs

In An Hwei Province, Wu Wei County, a barber named Lyang Jya-shou enjoyed nothing more than cooking and eating frogs. Since he did this often, the number of frogs he killed was uncountable.

One night after reaching middle-age, Lyang Jya-shou was just falling asleep when suddenly he saw frogs all over his bed--on his straw mat and in his blankets. They were everywhere, even inside his collar and up his sleeves.

He got out of bed and fired up the stove. Then he took his mat, bedding, and clothes and put them in the pot inside the steamer. The whole night long he was extremely nervous and unable to rest peacefully.

The following day as he was relating to a neighbor the story of what had happened the previous night, right in the middle of the conversation he suddenly became extremely tense and said, "The frogs are all over my body again!" His neighbor looked, but could not see any frogs. A moment later, Lyang Jya-shou said, "The frogs are all through my hair and eyebrows!" Then he completely shaved off the hair on his head, brows, and beard. But it didn't change the way he felt. Every day he had his son-in-law beat his body with a board. And that wasn't all. He also put his clothes in a mortar and had people pound them. Year in and year out he was constantly scattered, nervous, and unpeaceful. This went on for six years until finally he died.

This incident took place in the eleventh year of the Republic (1922). The story was reported by Lyang Jya-shou's neighbor, Jang Jung-yen, who was in his teens at the time and who personally witnessed the actual event.

田雞索命
安徽無為州有梁家善者以
剃頭為業酷嗜田雞所殺不
知凡幾至中年後一夜正睡
間忽見田雞滿林茵褥及襟
袖皆偏遂自起執爨將茵褥衣
裳均置鍋內蒸煮擾擾徹夜次
日向比鄰述夜間事正談論間
忽云田雞又在予身某處矣他
人則不之見也旋又告人云頭
髮眉毛中田雞悉偏又將鬚眉全
行剃去每日倩人用棒敲打其身
又將衣裳置於臼中令人擣之終
年紛擾不寧如是者六年始死
十一年張中言為余述此像伊十
餘齡時所親見張無為人即其鄰也

